

Coroner's inquest finds officer justified in Spyer shooting

By DAVE CLARK

A coroner's inquest jury found the Jan. 16 fatal shooting of Glenn Spyer to be justified, but at least one juror who was part of the majority expressed doubts about a Henderson police officer's actions in killing the man in the Walgreens parking lot near Racetrack Road and Boulder Highway.

After the inquest, juror Mary Spencer said she thought the actions of officer James Tetzlaff, an officer for nine years, warranted some form of punishment, but the jury instructions did not provide an option she found satisfactory.

Jurors were given the option of finding the shooting justified or criminal. Spencer said she felt constrained without a middle option, and she was not the only one. The jury foreman declined to sign the justified ruling in the 6-1 vote, she said. Spyer was shot during a confrontation after police followed a car he was driving that had been reported stolen. Police said he came at two police officers with a gun in his hand.

Spencer noted the entire episode lasted just 46 seconds. "The officer was too quick to fire," she said.

The juror was also taken aback when Tetzlaff said he would have fired even if a gun was not involved and he had been threatened only by a can of pepper spray.

"I think he needs to be better trained," Spencer said.

While officers maintained Spyer posed an immediate threat, multiple witnesses testified that they never saw a gun or Spyer motion his arms toward officers.

The incident began after 10 a.m. Jan. 16, when Tetzlaff and officer Travis Roundy were patrolling a desert area near Equestrian and Foothill drives. A man rummaging through the trunk of his Mustang piqued their interest.

Interested in actions that seemed suspicious, the officers followed Spyer through neighborhood streets without their lights on. Spyer was not speeding, Tetzlaff testified, but it appeared that he was trying to get away from police. They then discovered the car was stolen, and continued tailing it until it entered a Walgreens parking lot. At this point, they flashed their lights.

Immediately, officers testified, Spyer exited his vehicle at the same time Roundy and Tetzlaff left their car with guns drawn. Witnesses told the jury that Spyer was smiling oddly

Lake Mead Wal-Mart to expand

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

The Henderson Planning Commission voted 6-1 on Feb. 28 to grant Wal-Mart a permit to expand its store at 300 E. Lake Mead Parkway into a Super Wal-Mart.

The commission had already approved the design of the facility in November, but Wal-Mart had to obtain a conditional use permit because the new store will sell liquor and is within 1,500-feet of a church. St. Peter's Catholic Church, 200 S. Boulder Highway, is a little less than 1,100 feet away.

Wal-Mart spokeswoman Karianne Fallow said the company has been phasing out its traditional discount stores, which sell household items and non-perishable foods, and focusing on building the grocery-carrying Super Wal-Marts in response to customer comments.

"Our shoppers have told us loud and clear that their preference is for the supermarket format," she said.

Woman buried, inquest next

Her father, visiting the United States for the first time to bury his daughter, and other family members kissed the portrait farewell. Her youngest son, Arber, 5, had to be lifted so his lips could reach his mother's image.

Deshira Selimaj's family and the Albanian community laid her to rest Feb. 28 at Bunkers Eden Vale Memorial Park in Las Vegas. An Albanian immigrant who lived with her family in Henderson, she was remembered for her devotion to her three young sons and husband as she carved out a new life in the United States.

Zyber Selimaj described his wife, who was shot to death by a Henderson police officer on Feb. 12, as the unflappable anchor of the family. "She took care of my kids. She took care of me," he said.

The 42-year-old woman was shot in front of her two oldest sons after a confrontation with police at Sunridge Heights and Pecos Ridge parkways, where her husband had been pulled over for

Police said Deshira Selimaj had a knife and made a threatening move toward an officer, though some witnesses have said they did not see a knife and it appeared officers were not in harm's way.

At the funeral, family members expressed their gratitude to the public and media for following the case.

Deshira Selimaj's brother Flamur Luzi, speaking through an interpreter, implored the public to demand answers for why his sister was shot and killed.

"She was a respected mother. They not only killed a mother, but they killed her kids," he said, noting that the lives of her three children will never be the same.

At the funeral, the Selimajes' three children clutched teddy bears and wept as the last piles of dirt were tossed on top of their mother's grave. Zyber Selimaj consoled his sons, squeezing them and kissing the top of their heads. At the same time, he struggled with his own grief, alternately burying his face in his hands and seeking refuge in the arms of Imam Aslam Abdullah. "They destroyed our life," Zyber

No one spoke at the public hearing for the permit.

Commissioner Debra March, who cast the dissenting vote, said after the meeting that the larger store isn't right for the area.

"I just think it's important for grocery stores to be good stewards and good neighbors," she said. "There's already a grocery store in that same center that has alcohol, and it's important that grocery stores be good neighbors to the churches."

March added that the city is developing a strategy to revitalize the Boulder Highway corridor and said the Wal-Mart expansion isn't in line with the type of development the city is hoping to attract to the area.

Even with the permit granted, there is not a set time for when construction might begin and when the new store would open. It depends on how fast Wal-Mart can get the building permits and make all the necessary arrangements, Fallow said.

Da Vinci exhibit departs Henderson

By FRANCES VANDERPLOEG

Cesar Marquez, 5, stood in line eagerly awaiting his turn to launch the silverpainted wooden trebuchet at the Da Vinci Experience's going-away party March 2.

The Glen Taylor Elementary School student said he had come to see Da Vinci's art and inventions, but the trebuchet, a large catapult invented in the 10th century that was used to hurl rocks during battle, was a nice surprise. Instead of hurling rocks at the crowd, though, rubber balls served as ammunition.

March 2 was the last day for Henderson to have the experience, which has been stationed in a white tent off Water Street since Oct. 19. The traveling experience moved to Orem, Utah.

department invited the Theater in the Valley group, as well as Renaissance groups The Empire of Chivalry and Steel, and the Adrian Empire to entertain and educate the crowds.

The Renaissance groups staged combat shows, but those in attendance were also treated to belly dancers, face painting and theater reenactments.

Patty Dominguez, educational outreach for Henderson, said having the experience was educational for the city because it's thinking of opening a similar museum. "It's given the city an opportunity to see what kinds of things go into it (a museum)," she said.

Cesar was one of many children who lined up for the events, especially firing the trebuchet and sword fighting. Cesar said the sword fighting was his favorite.

They used air-filled "boppers" that were swordshaped to help limit injuries. A member of one of the empires stood in a flagged-off ring where children could come in and try to defeat him.

He would provide helpful tips to the children, pointing out that they're trying to fight him, not his sword, so they should aim for his body. When they would make contact with a limb, he'd put his arm behind him or take a knee to signify the loss of that limb. Once both arms

Water Street District to get decorative signs

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

In its efforts to reinvent the Water Street District as a vibrant, artistic destination, Henderson is leaving no avenue unexplored.

Now, Redevelopment Agency officials are hoping new decorative signs will encourage visitors to do the same.

The City Council, acting in its capacity as the Redevelopment Agency's board of directors, has authorized $56,000 for the agency to purchase 73 specially designed signs in the Water Street District.

The signs will not carry street names, but instead provide directions and information. All have been designed to match the Water Street District's art deco theme and will bear the district's logo.

Redevelopment manager Michelle Romero said the signs will provide information such as where to find parking and how to get to the Henderson Convention Center.

The city will also purchase special poles, designed like the lamp posts in the Water Street District, to hold the signs.

"We're purchasing these signs because of the branding of Water Street that we're working to establish," Romero said.

Green Valley Parkway work moves south

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

Road crews have been migrating south on Green Valley Parkway for several weeks, bringing backhoes, lane closures and minor traffic delays with them.

But representatives of the Regional Transportation Commission, which is behind the work, say the end result will be a crucial part of traffic management plans for Henderson.

Crews are updating communication cables that are part of the commission's Freeway and Arterial System of Transportation (FAST) — the system that monitors traffic flow throughout the Las Vegas Valley and works to facilitate it by controlling traffic lights and interactive communication signs.

The fiber optic cables that workers are installing beneath the street are a significant upgrade over the copper wires that were used previously, Brian Hoeft, operations supervisor for the RTC, said.

"I kind of compare it to dialup versus broadband Internet service," he said. "Or you could look at like sending water into Lake Mead from a faucet or from a storm drain - the difference is that dramatic."

The new cables are much more reliable and allow for faster communication, Hoeft able to maintain more accurate control over traffic on Green Valley Parkway. Hoeft said Green Valley

Parkway is important, because it connects to other major arterials like Interstate 215, Sunset Road and Eastern said, meaning FAST will be Avenue via Sunridge Heights Parkway.

Vehicles make their way through the intersection of Pebble Road and Green Valley Parkway. Because of the construction, lane closures and traffic delays are expected to continue for the next few weeks.

"If Green Valley doesn't operate efficiently, it really breaks down traffic flow in Henderson, so it's critical that we keep that communication open," he said. The work is expected to wrap up in May, Hoeft said, after which crews will begin similar work along Sunset Road and, later in the year, Eastern Avenue.

Paul Andricopulos, the city planner who worked on the ordinance, said the goal wasn't to make it easier to build a cellular tower on city property, but to look at applications that have been routinely granted and come up with a fast-track system based on design standards and conditions that the city favors.

"It doesn't take away from the current code," Andricopulos said. "What it does is offer a more narrow set of guidelines that will allow some towers to ickly through move mo the process."

Andricopulos said he understood the Planning Commission's hesitance about the ordinance.

"I think the Planning Commission is doing what they're supposed to do - they're looking out for the residents' best interests," he said.

One of the arguments of fered to support the ordinance that it would cut down on the Planning Commission's workload by reducing the number of public hearings the commissioners have to held didn't convince Burr.

LAS VEGAS/HENDERSON - A new report has just been released which reveals 7 costly mistakes that most homeowners make selling their home, and a 9 Step System that can help you sell your home fast and for the most amount of money.

This industry report shows clearly how the traditional ways of selling homes have become increasingly less and less effective in today's market. The fact of the matter is that fully three quarters of homesellers don't get what they want for their home and become disillusioned and worse - financially disadvantaged when they put their home on the market.

Council gives District go-ahead to expand

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

The Henderson Planning Commission unanimously signed off on a proposed zone change that would allow the developers of The District at Green Valley Ranch to build on a 20-acre parcel on the development's east end.

The City Council is scheduled to give final approval March 18.

The District is developed by the American Nevada Company, which is owned by the Greenspun Corporation, publisher of the Home News.

The first phase of the site's development will consist of two Hyatt hotels and an office building. Plans for the rest of the land have not been finalized, but American Nevada representatives said earlier this year the company will possibly develop a mix of residential and retail uses, like the model that has been used in the rest of The District.

Residents of Green Valley Ranch and surrounding neighborhoods have worked closely with American Nevada on the plan for the site and have given it their blessing

"We expect to continue to work with ANC on the rest of the development," said Robert Hughes, who lives in the nearby Horizons neighborhood and is a member of the residential advisory committee. "We believe that, by working together, this will be a successfully completed project in the end."

Attorney John Marchiano, who represented American Nevada, praised residents for their work on the project.

"They really are a remarkable group. ... They really have made this a much, much better project," he said.

Commissioners thanked both groups for working out any differences before approaching the city.

"You've done an incredible job working with the neighborhood." Chairman Dan Shaw told American Nevada representatives.

Business/industrial park almost ready

By DAVE CLARK

The first phase of a 42building business/industrial park near Lake Mead Parkway and Olsen Street is complete, and the developer expects the entire project to be finished by the close of 2009.

Jerry Daugherty, of JD Construction, said Ridge View at Eagle Rock is perfect for startup businesses. Already, the park has secured five businesses: an electrician, roofer, grader, marble and granite seller and a sports equipment sales and distributorship.

"There seems to be a real need for it in Henderson," he said. "It should bring a lot of new business to the area."

The site has also been seeing interest from entertainmentbased companies seeking video and music studios. Christopher Beaumont, of Keller Williams Commercial Realty, said. He attributed this to the project's proximity to Lake Las Vegas and its distance from Mc-Carran International Airport.

Each building is designed for a single business and includes a warehouse. They also feature views of the mountains and the Las Vegas Valley. Daugherty also highlighted the modern architecture using concrete and the glass storefronts.

"You can do anything you want to do with concrete," he said. "It's flexible and struc-

Phase i of Ridge View at Eagle Rock, an industrial and business park, is complete, with five new businesses occupying the buildings by the end of the month. With the completion of the project in 2009, there will be 42 buildings ranging from 3,500 to more than 10,000 square feet.

The project represents the first such large-scale venture for Daugherty, who has built concrete warehouses for other clients. When his clients for this spot fell through, the Daughertys decided to take on the $19 million project themselves, because Daugherty had already drawn plans.

"I think we've done it right. This is a great reward for us," he said.

His wife, Christie Daugherty, of Keller Williams Commercial Realty, said the companies moving into the Henderson location were formerly Las Vegas-based. She said they were attracted to the properties' good value. At $160 to $165 per square foot, the ownership price is less expensive than similar industrial parks in Las Vegas.

Phase 1's buildings are between about 3,900 square feet and 4,400 square feet with costs ranging from $648,615 to $706,400. Phase 4 is now in construction and will include larger buildings from roughly 4,000 square feet to more than 5,800 square feet. Those will cost between $774,040 and $1.16 million.

Fodder for readers $9,000 donation stocks C.T. Sewell Elementary library

By FRANCES VANDERPLOEG

C.T. Sewell Elementary School received a $9,000 donation to fill the library with more than 600 new nonfiction books.

The donation came through the Clark County READS Library Enhancement Program. READS, established in 2001, uses donations from various businesses and organizations to update resources for students in school libraries. Toyota Financial Services and Toyota Financial Savings Bank were responsible for the donation.

As pleased as she is to receive it, Sewell Principal Carrie Larson said the donation came as a surprise. Originally when she called Clark County READS, she was told Sewell's collection had been refurbished when the READS program first started. She was later told the Toyota companies made a donation for Sewell to receive books.

Larson said the school had expressed interest in the program because the average copyright year of its collection was 1980. Thanks to this donation and an $8,000 donation from Del Webb Middle School last year, she said, the average year of publication about 2000.

'We can't even keep them on the shelf," Larson said, noting that there are just over 700 students at the school enjoying the 600 new books. "It's brought some excitement to our library, which is great," she said. "The library is the heart of the school.'

Bridges tested to their limits

By FRANCES VANDERPLOEG

Screams of "Let's do it! Break it!" filled a UNLV classroom March 1 as students and volunteers watched miniature bridges undergo pressure to their breaking point. Pieces of wood were scattered on the floor beneath a machine designed to crush them and measure the feat. They were evidence of earlier breaks that more than likely got a big reaction from the students involved.

The bridge crushing is the climax of a project that hundreds of Henderson children and teens participated in to learn about engineering and design. They spend a week or more designing and building bridges of lightweight basswood, then transporting the bridges to UNLV to see how many pounds of pressure they can hold before the infrastructure is broken.

More often than not, the break was only minor and did not destroy the entire bridge, but on occasion the students were thrilled to see the wood fly behind the yellow caution tape.

According to preliminary results, Green Valley High School and Southeast Career Technical Academy placed first and second in the high school category, respectively, and Kesterson placed second in the elementary category. Preliminary middle school results were not available. but Greenspun, Del Webb and Jack and Terry Mannion middle schools represented Henderson.

LeAnn Chung, 8, of Lorna Kes-terson Elementary School, said she combined the design of two different bridges, the Pratt and the Howe, because she thought that would give her the best chance at a strong, efficient bridge. Her bridge held more than a 300-pound load.

"We looked at a lot of different types of bridges," she said. "One of them is stronger on the top and one, of them is stronger on the bottom." She said in the future she would reinforce the bottom with two layers of wood, as she did on top.

Paul Matuska of the federal Bureau of Reclamation, who helped organize the event, said close to 60 schools registered, with only two not showing up for the final competition. In the end, 381 bridges were tested. The testing took until 7 p.m. after one of two specially made presses to test the bridges broke just before the competition started. Many of the students had spent time after school or at home building the bridges, because it is not generally part of a class. Charlene Wiesenborn of Barbara and Hank Greenspun Junior High School said she used to do it as a class project but couldn't fit it in this year. Her students have been working after school once a week since November, building a test bridge first, then their competition bridge. Wiesenborn said she wouldn't know the results for a week or two, but her students were happy with how everything went. "They were pretty thrilled with what they got to observe," she said. "That's why it's always fun to take the kids there and see them get tested."

HYUN KIM/SPECIAL TO THE HOME NEWS Marsha Feller, right, helps fifth grader Maisle Leany finish her mask at Dooley Elementary School. Deeley students created masks with the help of Feller Art Factory and then wrote a song to go with the masks.

Students at John Dooley Elementary School were treated Feb. 20-22 to a few days of mask crafting and song-writing, courtesy of Fellers Art Factory.

The annual event has grown to be a student favorite, second grade teacher Connie Stolworthy said. The group uses the idea of making masks to teach the students mathrelated vocabulary and language arts, she said.

"They are amazing to listen to," Stolworthy said. "They incorporate everything into that one activity."

Students each get a two-hour block of time to work with Fellers. They start with 30 minutes of instruction on mask-building, then go back to the classroom and have an hour to build.

Members of Fellers remain in the classroom with the students talking to them about their masks and getting ideas. The students later gather again to work on a song to go with the masks.

Each grade works on a type of mask and a song. Fellers members will start the song, but the entire grade level works together to fin-

The higher grade levels get to make more involved, difficult masks, but Stolworthy said this year the primary grades got to choose what they wanted to make, such as a dog, cat or bear.

One of the students wanted to make a monkey, she said, and it ended up being a great lesson that students can do what they set their minds to. No one had a monkey mask to use as a pattern, but they were able to figure it out using materials they had.

The school one year skipped having the fifth graders make a mask to save money, Stolworthy said.

"They had all their masks from kindergarten to fourth grade, and they wanted one for fifth grade," she said. "Boy were they upset. ... We didn't make that mistake again."

Afterward, the teachers can incorporate the masks into reading and writing activities by allowing students to make a book using the ideas from the workshop.

A TEACHER'S VIEW René Hill

Today's students often lack technological literacy

Editor's note: Teacher's View columnist René Hill will return next week. This olumn originally ran in he Home News on Jan. 19, 2007.

Our students live in a technological age and have grown up with computers, iPods and cell phones. While they are able to use most of the gadgets that are available for entertainment, teachers, professors, librarians and other officials are finding that many of these kids lack technical literacy. In other words, they have no idea how to navigate the information landscape for specific information.

The journal Inside Higher Education reports officials from the California State University system are looking for ways to help students understand what is expected of them in an academic computer setting. The university system in conjunction with the Educational Testing Service is developing a test which, they believe, will accurately measure a student's technological literacy. As technology evolves, experts find that students are able to learn it, but not apply what they have learned.

Technology is growing so quickly that experts are working hard to understand the extent of the problem, said Diana Oblinger, vice president for Educause, a nonprofit group that deals with technology issues in higher education. The group is struggling to define technology literacy, but there are more questions than answers at this point, she said.

The Cal State system has been working on the problem longer than any other group. Since 1995, Cal

State officials have been working on improving technological literacy. Early attempts to improve students' skills have included workshops for instructors and librarians to emphasize the importance of information technology, as well as grants for faculty and librarians to redesign courses and for academic departments to create curriculums that incorporate information literacy.

Most recent efforts to measure literacy have been in the area of an information and communication technology literacy test created with the Educational Testing Service. More than 3,300 students across the Cal State system took the assessment.

In a follow-up survey, 90 percent of students said that the test was challenging, while three-fourths thought that the assessment tested tasks they performed at school or work.

Test developers see this type of test as part of the important foundation skills that all students should have, such as math and science. It is a probability that in the future we will see more emphasis on technological literacy filter down to the high school level.

While California is the only state at this point developing a program, it is probable that other states will follow suit. The knowledge requirements for students are ever expanding and it is only a matter of time until technology becomes part of those requirements.

Combined efforts will help make safer school zones

The Clark County School District Police Department and local police departments in Southern Nevada have their hands full responding to and trying to prevent crimes involving local schoolchildren.

Think of the Feb. 15 shooting death of Palo Verde High School freshman Christopher Privett and the Dec. 11 shooting that injured six young people at a school bus stop near the intersection of Alexander and Walnut roads, near Mojave High School.

Another type of crime doesn't involve knives and guns, but is as common and as potentially dangerous to our 295,000 students attending the county's 300 schools.

These are motor vehicle violations in and around school zones: Speeding through school parking lots and roads adjacent to schools, failing to yield to students in crosswalks and failing to stop for buses loading and unloading students and clearly displaying their flashing lights and stop signs.

These types of offenses don't generate a lot of headlines, but thankfully the School Police Department is on the case. Its officers have written 675 traffic citations this year. That's more than twice the number for last year with four months left in the school year.

he Until this year; officers had to consult with the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department or other local law enforcement agencies before issuing a ticket. The 2007 Legislature empowered school police to issue tickets on the spot, and that has led to the increase in ticketing.

The department is stopping about the same number of

ONE MAN'S VIEW Tim O'Callaghan Democratic dream team melts down

When it comes to presidential primaries and caucuses, few Americans begin to think about a key element of presidential campaigning this early in the game: the running mate or vice president.

I've been thinking about it from Day One. Before anyone announced, I was pondering the "Democratic Dream Team." As the announcements were made, I speculated with my friends on whether Hillary Clinton could win or possibly Barack Obama. In one of these little banters, Chris Venable, a friend and co-worker, suggested a Clinton-Obama ticket. The only question left was who would be president, and that one quickly clouded the thought process.

Unable to part with the idea, I've closely monitored the campaigns and the attitudes of Sens. Clinton and Obama. For a while, I was sure a deal could be struck between the two, especially because they were being so cordial, handling each other with kid gloves.

Well, as you know things have heated up between the two, Obama coming from behind, not quite tasting blood but certainly smelling it. While Clinton is certainly feeling his hot breath on her neck, she has turned up the rhetorical thermostat to outrun him. This is sure to end in a Democratic meltdown.

The verbal assaults have begun to ratchet up the tension between them, making any amends appear out of reach. The entire fiasco continues to strengthen what I would consider a nonthreatening Sen. John McCain. A month ago, I would have bet either Clinton or Obama could have beat him hands down. However, today I'm not so sure and, if he picks the right running mate to balance his moderate ideology, it could be a slam dunk.

Don't discount the damage to be inflicted by the Johnny Come Lately and spoiler Ralph Nader. At this point, however, if a real independent surfaced, it could make things very interesting.

While on the topic of presidential politics, I was scanning the AM band one morning last week for the Heidi Harris tease on KDWN 720-AM, and I happened across KXNT 840-AM morning host Alan Stock hitting rock bottom, which is lower than the gutter. He was posing the question of whether or not Barack Obama should have to use his middle name, Hussein, to be identified. Stock suggested that 90 percent of presidents have been identified by their full names.

In certain terms he was correct by saying presidents. In my lifetime I don't recall candidates using their middle name until after being elected and presented to the country as president. Stock's example of Ronald Wilson Reagan was a farce, because, if my memory serves me correctly, his middle name wasn't widely used until he left office.

So what has my shirt collar in a tangle? The idea that Stock would use whatever credibility he might have to inflame public opinion over Obama's middle name, which Obama did not choose, because it happens to be the last name of America's former top enemy. I found it even more disturbing when Stock tried to take cover under the guise of "The Messenger" — as in don't shoot the messenger. I guess that might work if he were actually a messenger and not a Talk Radio Host trying to push listeners' buttons and sell Toyotas, beds and dog food.

Not to take away props from Alan Stock — I know how tough it is to put together a radio program that has any substance — but there is a fine line between messenger and entertainer. It's probably tough being the opening gig for the best-known talk radio entertainer, "Crush Limp Jaw," every morning. By the way, Rush Limbaugh is the master of creating derogatory nicknames for politicians and celebrities.

You can always find some relief from all the name-calling by listening to Mark and Mercedes on the FM dial.

A few parting thoughts about the marital woes of Gov. Jim Gibbons and first lady Dawn Gibbons. It should be no surprise to anyone in the state of Nevada. The first clue was while he was running for the governor's mansion in Carson City, she was running for the House of Representatives, which would have sent her 3,000 miles away. No matter what happens, it shouldn't change how he's been running the state.

Whether or not it could affect his re-electability is another thing if his lackluster performance hasn't done it already. No matter, whatever happens in their married life should remain in their married life unless it inhibits his ability to govern.

A CITIZEN'S VIEW Dick Doyle Awareness can help citizens avoid being victims

It's a low-slung building set a few feet back from Spring Mountain Road and, if you weren't looking for it, you'd probably drive right There is a chain link fence around the property on which the building sits and if you glance in the backyard of the establishment, you will be amazed because ofttimes there will be a dozen or more police cars sitting in the parking area. That's a major clue as to what goes on in the building up front. It's the Southwest Area Command of the Las Vegas Metropolitan Police Department. This is home to police officers and support staff who patrol the West Valley and other communities in this Las Vegas police subdivision. It hums with activity 24/7 and is home-awayfrom-home for employees such as Bill Tullock. He's been in the crime prevention business for almost 40 years and chose the end of December to begin his welldeserved retirement. Bill wasn't in his office

I've noticed that there are a number of burglaries and robberies in the West Valley and I know the police are going after the thugs involved. But I also know that if we took better care of our property

the police would find it was easier for them.

• If you want to learn more about protecting yourself, your family and your property, and about how to keep the word "victim" from following your name on a police report, there are a couple of easy steps you can take: First, if you live in southwest Las Vegas, attend a First Tuesday Open House at the Southwest Area Command offices at 5925 Spring Mountain Road, on the south side of the street just a couple of hundred yards east of Jones Boulevard. They start at 7 p.m. And last as long as you want them to last. Many of the area stations (almost all of them have this open house program) even have refreshments! There will be no shortage of people to answer your questions, to offer suggestions and to advise you if you have a problem. Secondly, call the crime prevention office at 828-5804 and talk with Carol Ferranti, who has taken over Bill Tullock's desk. Or, better yet, e-mail her at C7859F@ LVMPD.com. Carol handles requests from Southwest area residents. Your telephone book lists other regional command offices that offer similar neighborhood crime prevention services. Call one of them if you want a speaker for your organization or just if you want to host a group of neighbors in your home some evening. Metro will send a crime prevention specialist. You will get a good lesson on the steps you need to take to become a specialist in your own home. Dick Doyle, a community volun-teer and former newspaper edi-tor, is a columnist for the Home News. motorists, but now those motorists are more likely to receive a ticket.

"There are always people that race through the school zones without a second thought," Lt. Ken Young said. "We're really making an effort to stop people from speeding and endangering the kids walking to and from school."

Last year, eight students were injured by vehicles while using crosswalks adjacent to school property, and two students have been killed in the past two years.

We applaud the School District Police Department's aggressive enforcement effort, and also encourage parents and schools to work together on additional traffic safety measures.

One program worth watching is under way at Elise L. Wolff Elementary School in Henderson.

Like at most elementary schools, the morning drop-off was chaotic in the school's parking lots and driveways. Parents pulled up to any curb they could find and then helped their children retrieve their backpacks. Kids darted between moving and parked cars, aggravating already stressed drivers.

Frustrated that the school had no real system for such a crucial function, the school's safety committee developed an innovative valet system that's now in use. Parents say the process is safer and more efficient.

Parent volunteers set up numbered cones along the parking lot curbs. Parents arriving at the school now wait until a spot opens up and they are directed to proceed to one of the numbered spots on the curbs. A volunteer then opens the door and helps the students get safely out of the car and into the school.

We applaud the combined efforts of law enforcement, parents and school personnel in improving safety at our schools and in enforcing all the laws at schools, including traffic laws.

very much. He was a civilian crime prevention specialist, charged with teaching citizens like you and me how to avoid being a victim of robbers, car thieves, pickpockets, identity thieves or robbers, car thieves, pickpockets, identity thieves and other criminals who are competing with him. Bill would speak before audiences as varied as a restaurant menu. A dozen or a hundred — the size of his audience didn't matter. He just wanted to get his message out. Actually, he had lots of messages. They revolved around telling you how to protect yourselves and reminding you that the police can't be everywhere all the time.

I've noticed that there are a number of burglaries and robberies in the West Valley and I know the police are going after the thugs involved. But I also know that if we took better care of our property and were more alert to the threats around us, the police would find it was easier for them to concentrate on a lesser number of crimes.

One of the crime prevention efforts Bill Tullock talked about is making and keeping your home secure at night. Not just by locking ALL your doors and windows — upstairs as well as down. He says if you have an alarm system, set it before bedtime. Keep a cell phone in your bedroom. Don't open your door to strangers even if they beg for help — instead, tell them you'll call 911 and the police will come by and "help" them.

You probably will hear your "visitors" as they acramble to get away from your front door.

And, if there is a strange sound in your home at night that awakens you, first let your eyes get accustomed to the darkness. Then, if you have children, call their names to determine if they are up and about. If they don't respond and you are then certain your home has an unwanted visitor, use your cell phone to dial 911.

Bill Tullock told me that hardly a day went by when he didn't get a call from a homeowners' association president, a property manager or a Neighborhood Watch block captain reporting some type of suspicious or criminal activity that has taken place in their neighborhood or within their housing complex.

They reported that a vehicle "was broken into last night," "gunshots were heard last night," "a neighbor's home was broken into last night," or "there was a suspicious vehicle parked on our street last night."

All these instances should have been reported to the police "last night," Tullock said. "Unfortunately, we didn't learn about any of these complaints until the next day when we were notified by somebody not directly involved. There was little the police could do but take a report."

The special phone numbers are easy to remember:

• For an emergency, a crime in progress or something life threatening, the number is 9-1-1.

• If you see or hear something suspicious or if you are a victim or witness to a crime that the police should investigate, the number is as he wandered around the parking lot and disobeyed repeated commands given by Tetzlaff and Roundy.

Roundy testified that Spyer's left hand entered the pocket of his long trench coat and he calmly responded "no" to demands that he re-enter his vehicle and show his hands.

"I said, 'Lie down on the ground. You could be shot,' Roundy said. "(Spyer) said, 'You know what? shoot me.""

Then, Roundy said, he saw Spyer pull out a black bag containing the partially exposed handle of a gun. He informed Tetzlaff before Spyer began walking toward Tetzlaff with what he said was both pepper spray and the gun in the black bag.

Tetzlaff testified he did not see the gun before the shooting, but relied on his partner's advice as he fired upon Spyer.

"When he began raising a can of pepper spray toward me, I shot him," Tetzlaff said. "His intentions were obvious."

Tetzlaff said he fired three shots. Roundy did not fire any.

Tetzlaff told jurors he feared Spyer would have shot him after first incapacitating him with pepper spray.

"He would have been as good as shot," Roundy said.

Tetzlaff also testified that drawing guns on a stolen vehicle is standard procedure, and told jurors he was adhering to his training — shooting at a person's center mass to halt a threat to life. In response to a juror question, Tetzlaff said he would have fired even if a gun was not involved and he was threatened just by a can of pepper spray.

James and Kelly Stephenson, who said they were watching from 20 to 25 yards away after stopping their car on Racetrack Road, testified that they never saw a gun in Spyer's hands.

"When he went down the last time, a bag did fall off his arm," James Stephenson said.

He also said he never saw Spyer's hands inside his trench coat.

Officers asserted that Spyer reached into his pockets and into the black bag, which police said contained a .45-caliber Glock.

Kelly Stephenson recounted her initial reaction of disbelief when she arrived on the scene.

She said she remembered thinking, "Why are they go-ing to shoot him?"" Kelly Stephenson said. "He's not doing anything wrong."

She told jurors that she later watched Spyer shot as he reached for a black bag dangling from his left arm. Kelly Stephenson had snapped photos of the incident's aftermath from her cell phone, which were displayed for the jury.

The first two photos were initially skipped over by Assistant District Attorney Christopher Lalli, but were shown after Stephenson told the jury that the gun appeared only in the second and third pictures, after the black bag was kicked away by officers.

"In the first picture you can clearly not see a gun lying around anywhere," Kelly Stephenson said.

A maintenance worker at Nevada State Bank also told the jury he never saw Spyer point anything at officers. From his vantage point at the bank parking lot across the street, Keith Held said, Spyer's hands were not extended in any way.

"His hands always looked to be at his side or in his pockets," Held said.

Walgreens customer Lisa Rachet told jurors she did not see Spyer's hands extended.

But officers on the scene said Spyer posed an immediate threat. Responding to the scene, Henderson officer Marcos Aguirre said one of Spyer's arms was outreached before he was shot.

Although he never saw the gun, Aguirre believed such a weapon was present in his hands. He testified that he was the one who kicked the bag away from Spyer after he dropped to the ground.

Officer Chad Mitchell, who conducted the Henderson Police Department's internal investigation, testified that the officers acted in accordance with standard protocol. He noted that drawing a firearm when performing a high-risk traffic stop is standard. He also stated that using Tasers or other nonlethal weapons would not be in compliance with policy.

Mitchell additionally reported that no fingerprints were retrieved from the gun, although he said this was not uncommon. He told the jury it was registered to Spyer.

City leases land for facility for chronically ill children

By JEREMY TWITCHELL

Henderson has agreed to lease three acres of land near Nevada State Collège to a nonprofit group that plans to build a care facility for chronically ill children.

After paying a $10,000 security deposit, the Positively Kids group would pay the city the token sum of $3.34 per year for the land in a 50-year lease agreement, subject to final approval in April.

"We're very excited and we're very appreciative of the city of Henderson, that's for darn sure," Fred Schultz, chief executive officer of Positively Kids, said.

Schultz said he plans to build a 72-bed inpatient facility that will provide both short- and long-term care for chronically ill children as well as support for their families.

The facility would be the first of its kind in Nevada and would fill a critical need by giving the extra attention that the children may not receive at a traditional care center, Schultz said.

"We think that everybody in the facility should have the focus and the mindset to provide the children and their families with everything they need," he said.

Positively Kids runs three programs, Schultz said. It provides in-home nursing assistance for ill children, offers respite services that allow family members to take needed breaks while knowing that their child is in spots in traditional day cares with accompanying nurses to give ill children social interaction.

The Henderson facility would combine all three existing programs in one place while adding the fourth dimension of inpatient treatment.

"We provide very out-ofthe-box services that are not available anywhere else here," Schultz said. "The next natural step after those three programs was to have an inpatient facility."

Positively Kids gets 70 percent of its funding from state and local grants, Schultz said. The design for the Henderson building will be donated by local architecture firm RAFI, but Schultz said the group will need to raise between $20 million and $30 million for construction.

Henderson Property Manager Jim Dale said city officials jumped at the chance to donate the land when approached by Positively Kids.

"The city was in favor of putting this in Henderson, and we could see a need for it the valley," Dale said. "It provides skilled pediatric services to medically fragile kids — that's a major benefit right there.'

The city recently donated land in the vicinity for the construction of the Nathan Adelson Hospice, which will be an adult care facility.

Dale said the city still has land in the area and will likely use what's left for development in support of the Nevada State campus --- possibly a mix of residential and retail uses.

Arber Selimaj, 5, mourns the loss of his mother, Deshira Selimaj, during a funeral service at Bunkers Cemetery.

Selimaj said. "They destroyed this family."

Zyber Selimaj married Deshira Selimaj in 1994 after meeting with her parents in Albania. The marriage was part of his dream of creating a better life in the United States. The couple worked as ice cream truck drivers.

"All my entire life was oppression," Zyber Selimaj said. "I come here, I think I'm free. I want to start my life."

Now the 65-year-old is left to take care of the couple's children – Azbi, 7, Alban, 11, and Arber - without his wife. It will be a difficult task, Zyber's brother Ray Selimaj noted, because she ran everything.

"He can't think straight," Ray Selimaj said. Since the shooting, Zyber Selimaj said, he has been unable to bring himself to peddle ice cream because of his grief.

"She work hard like a man," Zyber Selimaj said. "She buy the ice cream for my business. She never stop."

To help with the loss of income, the Selimaj Family Donation Fund has been created at Nevada State Bank.

Selimaj also plans to move out of the house the family bought five months ago, when they left Vista Mobile Home Park. It was a big step for Zyber Selimaj, who spent years as a dishwasher and then baggage handler at McCarran International Airport before starting his ice cream business three years ago.

"This," he said, "stops everything."

Zyber Selimaj recalled how $600, upset him.

Zyber Selimaj said of the citation. "I come to you."

What happened afterward remains in dispute. But on the day of the funeral, the arguments, for the moment, shifted to the background. As Zyber Selimaj slowly walked away from his wife's grave, he looked back, staring intently at her photo, his brow furrowed and his hands clasped tightly together.

"All he wants is his wife back," Ray Selimaj said.

Ex-Falcon hopes to open eyes of NFL scouts

By JARED HARMON

While Foothill graduate Jeff Van Orsow's time with Oregon State's football team is through, he has no plans to hang up the pads anytime soon.

The 6-foot-4, 262-pound defensive lineman graduated with a political science degree in December and since then has been able to put all his energy toward preparing for the Beavers' Pro Day Workout on March 14.

"Playing football is what I do — it's what I love," Van Orsow said. "I'm confident that I have something to offer an NFL team. I thought I did well this year and demonstrated that I'm a complete player from all sides."

Pro Day workouts are typically held on campus and give NFL scouts the opportunity to take a look at draft prospects in a setting other than the NFL Combine. For Van Orsow, who was not at the NFL Combine on Feb. 20, the workout will provide him the chance to demonstrate why he should be in discussions on draft day, April 26.

"Pro Day is basically the exact same thing as the NFL Combine but with scouts rather than head coaches," Van Orsow said. "You get the same big name players out on the field and I know a lot of scouts weight the Pro Days more than the combine. I want to try and turn some heads and show what kind of speed I have."

In preparation for the workout, Van Orsow said he has timed in the 40-yard dash at 4.8 seconds which would put him somewhere in the middle of the pack had he participated in the combine. Nfldraftscout. com has Van Orsow ranked 44th out of 167 defensive ends and 524th overall out of 2,550. In four seasons with the Beavers, he amassed 94 tackles, nine sacks and three interceptions — one of which he returned for a touchdown.

"I've been kind of working on everything — no one thing in particular — to get prepared," he said. "I think some scouts might question my pass rush, but I think that was more because of the type of defense we ran this season and the different packages we used than anything on my part. I'm going to have to show with my Little League International, the governing body for the worldwide youth baseball organization, has some local coaches and league presidents scratching their heads over a rule that will be implemented this spring.

The rule requires all 12year-olds to play in the more competitive Majors Division, the division for the Little League World Series in Williamsport, Pa., every August, as opposed to giving them the choice of playing in the lower, less competitive Minors Division. there is a stipulation that allows those 12-year-olds who may lack the skills to play in the Major Division to go back to minors. According to the rule book, the parent or legal guardian of a player, in conjunction with the local league board of directors, must submit a request to the district administrator who as final approval.

"It's a mess. With that process the kid might miss a good chunk of the season. So it's just going to be a big disadvantage for that kid," Soto said.

State's best competitors come together for Rodeo Club event

By SEAN AMMERMAN

The top high school rodeo competitors across Nevada saddled up at Horseman's Park in East Las Vegas on March 1 and 2 for the Las Vegas High School Rodeo Club's annual rodeo.

Members from Nevada's 15 clubs along with individual competitors parked their trailers at the park and spent the weekend doing everything from steer wrestling to bull riding.

Las Vegas High School Rodeo Club director Curtis Robison said the event was as much about getting together as competition.

"Back in the days when I used to rodeo I couldn't compete at the level that these kids do," Robison said. "There are so many different new techniques. Everything is done in different and better ways."

The top participants from the Las Vegas Club included Robison's son, senior Cody Robison, of Northwest Las Vegas, who won the team roping event on March 2 with Chase Williams from Pahrump with a time of 8.34 seconds. Team roping is a timed event where two riders on horseback rope a steer.

Cody Robison, who advanced to the National High School Finals Rodeo last season, is in first place in calf roping, a timed event where a rider ropes a calf and ties it down.

To advance to the national finals, competitors must place in the top four of their event at the state tournament.

Senior Tyler Richards, of Southwest Las Vegas, advanced to the national finals last season in calf roping and took second place in the event on March 1 with a time of 13.57 seconds.

Gators baseball fans ready for another title

Nick Garritano was enjoying dinner one evening with his wife and two young children when he was approached by a man with a message for the upcoming high school baseball season.

"He noticed that I was the coach at Green Valley and came up to me and said: 'Good luck. We expect good things from you this year," Garritano remembered.

Welcome to Green Valley, where a successful season is defined by one thing — winning the state championship. That's something Garritano's done twice in nine years at the helm of the program, but with the last title coming in 2003, he can understand why longtime supporters are restless. It's the longest drought in the school's 17-year history.

and even though the Gators won Sunrise Regional title last spring and in 2005, they haven't met expectations from the passionate baseball community.

Green Valley captured six straight state titles from 1993 to '98 in setting the bar high for future teams. Garritano refuses to admit it, but it's unrealistic to compare the dominating teams of the mid-1990s to the current team that took the field for the season opener March 6 against visiting Rancho.

Green Valley's enrollment has been gutted by the opening of Silverado, Foothill, Coronado and Del Sol since its glory years, meaning the number of players — especially quality players to choose from — has dwindled.

Green Valley had 48 tryout for its two teams in February, roughly half the number of

The purpose of the regulation is to ensure local leagues are using the Minors Division as a training ground, and not keeping capable 12-year-olds from moving up. Little League starts this month in Southern Nevada.

Some area coaches, however, feel several 12 yearolds aren't ready to play in the upper division.

"Some of these kids just aren't ready," said David Soto, a Henderson Little League coach with 38 years experience. "Some of these kids won't even be able to get their bats off their shoulders with the pitchers in the majors. It is a very poor decision."

For Paseo Verde majors coach Tim McCollum, the change is more of a safety issue.

"A lot of the kids only play recreational and to face off against club ready pitchers, who are throwing in the 70 and 80 mph range, can be flat out dangerous," he said. To ease some concerns, 95 percent in favor of the rule, but has concerns.

"There is always going to be exceptions. You might come across a parent who just doesn't want their kid playing in the upper division," Stevens said. "In those situations you need some more flexibility."

The 12-year-old requirement isn't the only change in the rule book.

There is also a provision to prohibit a pitcher from coming out of a game to play catcher, while all pitchers ages 16 and under won't be eligible to pitch the following game if they throw more than 41 pitches.

Also, pitchers will be required to pitch outside for an intentional walk, rather than give the hitter an "automatic" walk without throwing a single pitch.

"I like the new pitching rules," said Tony Spada, a Summerlin South Little League Majors Division coach. "It will help protect

Boulder City names new football coach

By BRENT HINCKLEY

Alex Kazel is the new face of Boulder City High's football program. He was hired as the Eagles' coach on March 4.

"I want to establish a program that contends year in and year out," Kazel said. "I plan on being here a long time. I want my boys to grow up here and come play for me. I want them to have those experiences."

Jeff Knutson, the former coach who left his post to become the school's athletic director, was pleased with the hire.

"We wanted a young and energetic coach; someone with good knowledge, and he fit the bill. He's young, gungho and learned from one of the better coaches (former Basic coach Cliff Frazier) around," Knutson said.

Kazel, 35, has a long history at Basic. He was an assistant coach under Frazier for the last 10 years, the last two years as the team's defensive coordinator, and played for the Wolves from 1986 to 1990. He will teach math at Boulder City.

"We also hire teachers. He's what's known as a 'highlyqualified' teacher, which isn't easy to become and there's not many around," Knutson said. "We think he's really going to fit in well here with the staff, and be someone the assistant coaches want to work for."

Kazel's success was well documented at Basic. In consecutive years as the junior varsity coach, he took freshman teams that didn't win a game and led them to 8-1 records.

"He has established his track record," Knutson said. Kazel said it was a tough decision to leave his alma mater.

"I didn't think I ever would (leave)," Kazel said. "That atmosphere around Boulder City is how Basic used to be. It's one town, one school, one game on Friday night."

He met with members of the Eagles football team on March 4.

"I told the kids I'm going to expect them to give a hard day's work, and I'll give a hard day's work also," Kazel said.

The Eagles will have spring practices starting May 19 and participate in the Basic passing tournament near the end of the school year.

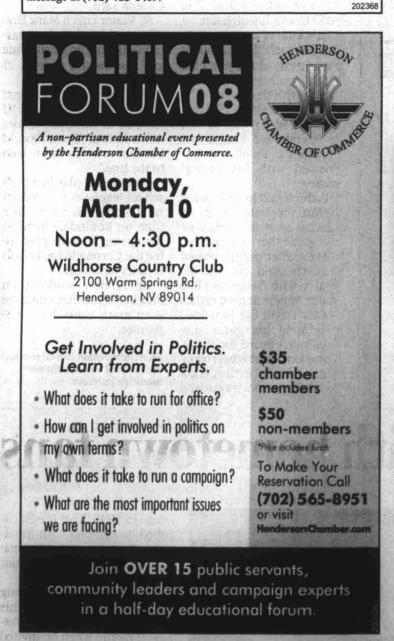

Boulder City went 3-7 in 2007, losing in the first round of the 3A Southern League tournament 42-24 to Virgin Valley.

"You have to expect to win no matter who you're play-ing," Kazel said. "You play to win and if you have that attitude, it'll give you an opportunity to win."

Silverado turns to veteran talent

By JARED HARMON

With the graduation of such baseball heavyweights as Mike McDade and Kevin Rath from Silverado, many coaches in the Southeast Division were hoping to breathe a sigh of relief as the Skyhawks took a season to put the pieces back together.

But with 16 varsity lettermen returning, Silverado coach Brian Whitaker said not to expect a rebuilding year.

"We've got some kids who have been a part of the program and know what's expected of them, now it's just a matter of logging innings and getting more at-bats," Whitaker said. "It's a good group and I wouldn't trade them for anyone else's team. I like what I'm seeing on the field and like any other coach in the spring I'm optimistic. Hope springs eternal."

Whitaker said it will be tough to replace the combined 24 home runs and 85 RBIs from Rath, now with Cal State Fullerton, and McDade, who was drafted by the Toronto Blue Jays.

Leading the way for the Skyhawks will be returning senior center fielder Jordan Keegan, who enters this season as a two-time all-state selection and a Louisville Slugger Pre-Season High School All-American by Collegiate Baseball.

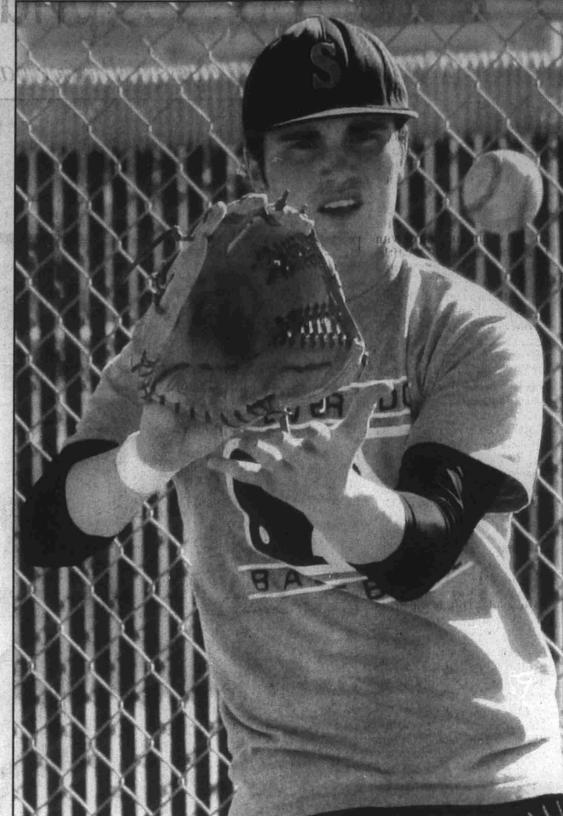

"Jordan is a marquee guy for us and he's about as legit a player as you're going to find - he can do just about everything," Whitaker said. "We're expecting another big year from him."

Keegan is coming off a season where he batted .472 with five home runs and 25 RBIs while leading the team in runs.

"Every year I try to push myself for bigger and better things and hopefully I can keep that going this year and do whatever it takes to get us back to (the state championship tournament)," Keegan said.

Keegan will get some help from a number of returning seniors including Trevor Kirk, Justin Rainville, Stefan Norman, Adam Koglin and Pierce Belaustegui.

Kirk, a shortstop, will re-

"After missing a year it's great to be back out here." Kirk said. "I want to have the best senior year I can. I think the team is starting to look real good.

Silverado being thought of as a powerhouse in the Southeast, the 'Hawks might slide under the radar early on as teams will underestimate them. "Everyone thinks we're out of the picture because we lost Rath and we lost McDade," Keegan said. "They think we don't have anybody left. But we have a lot of great players here. We're going to come out and out-hustle them and outwork them the way we always do and we'll find a way to keep winning."

Muhammad ousted in doubles event

Playing for pride

Adult league basketball players still have passion for game

By TIM MULLIN

Former UNLV guard Lou Kelly took a pass at the 3-point arc and proceeded to drive into the lane for a one-handed slam dunk.

Kelly wasn't playing in front of 20,000 screaming fans for an NBA championship or with the Rebels for a NCAA title, but it doesn't mean he didn't give it is all.

Even if it was only in front of a handful of spectators at the Henderson Downtown Recreation Center on Basic Road between Pacific Avenue and Water Street for the Henderson Winter Adult City League Championships.

Kelly and his VIP Dawgs topped Ice Out for the winter title on Feb. 28 with a convincing 88-58 victory. The contest was the end of a seven-week season, which ended in a three way tie - VIP Dawgs, Ice Out and Houdini all finished 11-2. Earlier that night, VIP Dawgs knocked out Houdini for the chance to play Ice Out in the championship game.

"Hey, a game is a game," Kelly said. "This is for pride. We know all of these guys and will see them tomorrow only to mess with them about losing this game. For us it is more about the stories we can tell, then the actual game.'

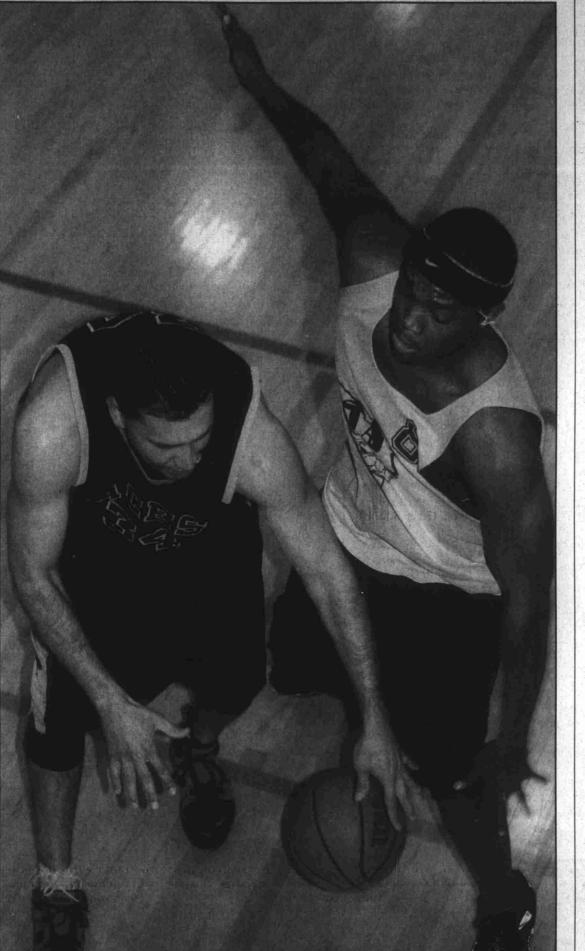

Cone of those stories will be his dunk, which was over one his friends, who also happens to be Kelly's barber.

"Hopefully next time I'm in he doesn't mess up my haircut," Kelly jokingly said.

The league, for ages 18 to 40, is designed for recreation and to keep players in shape. Obviously, it also gets competitive.

"It is fun to stay active," said Anthony Livingston, 37, who played point guard on Cal-State Bakersfield's Division II National Championships team in 1994. "You don't want to get fat or out of shape. I think I am doing pretty well for my age."

Youth hits 25 straight free throws to notch third consecutive tourney win

By SEAN AMMERMAN

J.P. Cadena had three warm-up shots before he stepped to the foul line for the Southern Regional Knights Of Columbus Free Throw Challenge at St. Viator School on Feb. 22.

The first two warm-ups missed to the right.

After a simple adjustment - moving a half step to the left - Cadena, of Green Valley, made the final practice shot.

It was all the eighth-grader from St. Viator Middle School needed. He proceeded to make 25 straight free throws to win the Knights' state title for the third straight year. Scores from regionals in Northern and Southern Nevada are compared to determine state champions.

"A guy came up and asked me if I was ready," Cadena remembered the day of competition. "I said 'no' but then he made me shoot anyway."

The competition featured divisions for boys and girls ages 10 to 14 from other parishes and Catholic schools across the Las Vegas Valley, Pahrump and Laughlin who qualified through district tournaments.

Each got 25 shots from the foul line. Cadena made 23 shots last year and 22 in 2006 to win his division.

"It's kind of pretty easy to do," he said. "It's all about concentration. I'm just glad I can graduate from the school with this."

After he sunk the 25th free row, Cadena was rushed by friends and Knights Of Columbus members impressed with his performance. Cadena said he developed his foul shot from playing 21, which is a one-on-one basketball game that involves free throws after points scored from the field. He said his rivalry with friend and Bob Miller Middle School eighth grader David Farris helped developed his game. Cadena plays guard for the St. Viator boys basketball team, which went 9-0 in the Catholic middle school league and won its championship.

"All the tight games end with free throws and whoever makes the most wins," Cadena said.

St. Viator coach Mark Dreschler said Cadena has mastered both the technique and the mental aspects of making a free throw.

"J.P. has really improved this year," Dreschler said. "If the end of the game comes down to foul shots, I would like him to be the one to step to the line." Cadena will play in a high school league at the Donald W. Reynolds Boys & Girls Club on Robindale Road in the spring to help prepare for the Coronado basketball tryouts next year. "You owe me," he shouted from the bench. "Come on, you can do better than that. What do you mean you want a foul, there was no foul on that."

Livingston had similar comment all night long.

"Its just for fun, man," he said. "They all know we are joking around. Like with the, 'you owe me.' Anytime somebody does something stupid I tell them they owe me a better possession next time down

NASCAR's Kurt Busch mingles with hometown fans

By SEAN AMMERMAN

NASCAR weekend in Las Vegas is more than just another Sprint Cup race for Kurt Busch, it's an annual homecoming. As soon the Durango graduate arrived at Sierra Gold in West Valley on Feb. 28, he was greeted by scores of admirers Discussions with locals on the latest hometown news were mixed with the usual chatter about race day and NASCAR.

"The comfort of coming here is because everything seems so familiar," Busch said.

If there was any doubt how fanatical the locals are about the hometown star, those questions were answered at Sierra Gold, which was filled to the brim with around 450 autograph seekers.

Busch fan Steve Perkins, who was on hand at the meet and greet, said everyone seemed to have a memory of Busch or his younger brother, Kyle Busch, when they grew up in Las Veston Cup, the league's top racing series. He won the title in 2004.

Last season, he took seventh and his brother took fourth.

Jeff Motley, the senior public relations director with the Las Vegas Motor Speedway, said their successes have had a large impact on racing in Las Vegas

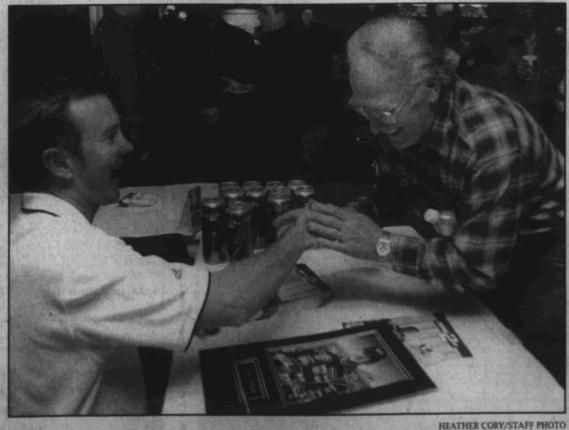

"It has certainly helped NASCAR grow in the community," Motley said. "Not only at the speedway, but when you watch a race from Charlotte or Loudon (N.H) and hear 'Kurt or Kyle Busch from Las Vegas,' it's another link."

Growing up in the West Valley, Kurt Busch was as interested in baseball as he was racing.

He became friends with fellow Durango alum and St. Louis Cardinals outfielder Ryan Ludwick and still makes occasional appearances at his games.

Busch's father raced in local circuits, but didn't introduce his son to the sport until he was a freshman in high school.

"I was going to go out for the baseball team," Kurt Busch said. "But when they were doing tryouts that's when a race when he took third in the Win- car showed up in my garage

"There was all types of support for the basketball team," Kurt Busch said. "A whole The Trailblazers where win- group would get together after the game -my friends, motocross buddies, cheerleaders - and we would go to the Forums Shops at Caesars. There was a '50s style diner there that we would always hang out at."

After graduating from Durango in 1996, Kurt Busch enrolled at Arizona with intentions of majoring in pharmacy, but racing was still a major part of his life.

Star Nursery owner Craig Keough gave Kurt Busch his first major break into professional racing when he invited him to join the Star Nursery racing team.

"I was struggling, trying to figure out what direction to go in life," Kurt Busch said. "Everybody told me to take my job or college more seriously and let the racing thing go."

Kurt Busch may have a home field advantage at the Las Vegas Motor Speedway, but he didn't find much luck in the UAW-Dodge 400 on March 2, when he finished at No. 38 after an accident.

"It's a tough, exciting track and the speed is incredible out in Vegas," he said before the race. "This track is banked quite a bit so it keeps the speeds up."

Kyle Busch lost his lead in the Sprint Cup standings, after taking 11th place. Carl Edwards took first in the race and the Cup lead.

New blood to head up 'Blazers, Grizzlies football programs

By SEAN AMMERMAN

West Valley's two public high schools will have new football coaches next fall.

Spring Valley replaced Johnny Macon with Colorado transplant Kelly Murphy at the end of February, while veteran Gary Maki left the post at Rancho to replace Bobby Reda at Durango in the middle of the month.

The decision wasn't easy for Maki, who spent three difficult years at Rancho before leading the Rams to a .500 record last fall in his fourth and final season. Rancho had no home field from 2004 to 2006 while its stadium was remodeled as part of the school's $75 million makeover.

Playing all of its games on the road, Rancho went 3-29 during the process and was forced to practice at Hartke Park, two blocks from campus.

But, last fall, Rancho went 5-5 as it opened the new facility equipped with a turf field and a new weight room.

"As a football coach, it was probably the most difficult decision I have had to make."

Maki said. "I think Rancho could have its best team in 15 years (next year)."

Durango struggled last season with a young team and finished at 2-7, but Maki was encouraged by the turnout of more than 80 students to his first football meeting.

"He obviously has a passion for football and his organizational skills are very impressive," said Annette Conners-Harris, Durango's athletic administrator. "We had a lot of people with great qualifications who applied for the job. Gary just shined above the rest.

At Spring Valley, the 34year-old Murphy will look to continue the success Macon started - Macon was the only coach in the school's four-year history. The Grizzlies have advanced to the postseason two straight years and went 7-4 last season.

"The transition will be smooth and easy for the team," Murphy said. "That's a positive for me and it makes life easier on me."

Foothill coach Marty Redmond, an assistant coach during Van Orsow's time with the Falcons, said he always knew Van Orsow had big things ahead of him and wouldn't be surprised to see him playing on Sundays.

"Jeff was always a solid player and very consistent," Redmond said. "He was always real strong and a hard-worker in the weight room. He made smart decisions on the field, he knew the game, he did all the right things you want from an athlete.'

With the workout growing closer, Van Orsow said he's more excited than nervous to perform. Part of that comfort level stems from the fact that Van Orsow has established a fall back plan. He received his pilot's licence last fall.

"Football is definitely No. 1 for me, there's no doubt about that, but I wanted to make sure I had some options," Van Orsow said. "But right now my mind is still on football."

board. Instead of relieving the boredom at home, however, Scrabble created only frustration for Block, as her husband relied on simple words in their matches.

"All the time it was 'cat,' 'fat,' 'rat,' dog,'" she said. "I asked, 'Do you know any other words?"

If her husband did, he never used them.

"So I quit playing with him," Block said.

It appeared her Scrabble days were over. That is, until one night when she saw a man hurrying along a street with Scrabble board in hand. Block stopped the gentleman and inquired where he was going with his game. He was on his way to a Scrabble tournament, he said, and he invited Block to join him.

That was 40 years ago and Block has been a Scrabble fanatic since.

"It's just a thing I know how to do and I'll play it until I can't play anymore," said the Sun City Summerlin resident, who politely declined to give her age. In September, Block co-founded the Summerlin Scrabble Monday Madness club, which meets twice a month at Summerlin Library, 1771 Inner Circle Drive. The next meeting is 2 p.m. Monday, March 10.

The club provides Block and its dozen or so members an opportunity to play one-on-one against human competition.

Cecelia Reno, a 65-year-old North Las Vegas resident, recently started playing Scrabble and joined the club at the behest of her friend Phyllis Persicketti, 60, also of North Las Vegas.

"I'm learning a lot of new things," Reno said. "It's good for the mind, it's enjoyable and it stimulates you."

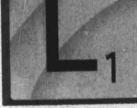

Persicketti is the veteran of the two friends. She's been an avid Scrabble player for eight years.

"I always thought I was good with words, so I thought it would be easy," she said. "But there's a lot of strategy and I'm not so good at that.

"I'm trying to get better and I might enter a tournament in the future, but I'm not ready for it yet."

Scrabbled past

Scrabble is the most popular word game in the world, with 100 million sets sold worldwide and between one and two million sets sold annually in North America, according to statistics at History.com.

In fact, Scrabble is found in one out of every three American homes - not bad for a game invented by an out-of-work architect, Alfred Mosher Butts, during the Great Depression.

According to the official Scrabble Web site at Hasbro.com, Butts originally titled his game "Lexico," but later renamed it "Criss-Cross Words."

The name change didn't matter; the game still didn't sell.

After some modifications to the rules and design of Criss-Cross Words by Butts and his partner James Brunot, the game was retitled Scrabble — meaning "to grope frantically" - and trademarked in 1948.

Legend has it the president of Macy's discovered the game on vacation sometime in the early 1950s, and ordered Scrabbles for his store. Within a year, Scrabble sets were being rationed to stores nationwide.

Decades later, Scrabble spawned an eponymous daytime game show hosted by Chuck Woolery that ran from 1984-1990. There are myriad video and computer versions of Scrabble.

Most recently Scrabble has been in the news because of an online version, Scrabulous, offered to users of the social networking site Facebook. Scrabulous attracts more than 500,000 users daily and has drawn the ire of Hasbro and Mattel, which own the rights to Scrabble in North America and worldwide, respectively. The game and toy makers say Scrabulous infringes on their copyright of Scrabble and want Facebook to remove the online game.

As of this deadline, Scrabulous remains available to Facebook users. Coincidentally or not, there are rumors that Hasbro and Mattel are readying an online version of Scrabble of their own.

Competition

Luise Shafritz started playing Scrabble as a child because her German mom thought it was the best way for her to learn English.

But she rediscovered the game in the mid-1980s in Denver when she joined a competitive Scrabble club.

And Shafritz is good. Very good.

At one point nearly a decade ago, the 68-year-old Summerlin resident was ranked as the 44th best Scrabble player and the seventh best female player in North America by the National Scrabble Association, the official organization of North America's 10,000 tournament Scrabble game players.

"Then I ran into some rough tournaments," she said.

Shafritz's North American ranking has since dropped to 255th.

Competitive Scrabble is a serious business. For those who want to know

Comedian Pauly Shore brings his father into stand-up act

By KIRK BAIRD

Life on the road for a standup can be tough enough.

But imagine life on the road for a stand-up with his dad.

Ask Pauly Shore, 40, who's comedian father, Sammy Shore, has served as his opening act on and off since 1995.

"Doing business with family is a little interesting," Pauly said. "Even though he's a comic and he's been doing this for years, he's still your dad.

"At the end of the day, it's pretty cool. It's not like he's some old guy onstage opening for me. I think people really appreciate it and like it. Plus, no one out there is doing this."

It was actually Sammy's exwife and Pauly's mom, Mizti, who suggested the two go on the road.

"I think she said it as a joke, and then my Dad and I, as dumb as we are, said, 'OK, let's do it,' " Pauly said.

Not surprisingly, Sammy has a different, more familial version of Mitzi's suggestion than his son's.

"She said, 'I think it would be a good time to be with your dad, Pauly,' It was a great thing to say to her son," Sammy said. "Our first job together was at the Comedy Store in San Diego. It was great. That was it, from that point on. We've been together all these years on and off."

Pauly and Sammy perform at 11 p.m. Friday and Saturday in the Orleans Showroom, 4500 W. Tropicana Ave.

Sammy, who moved to Summerlin from Los Angeles a year ago, said he was often gone on the road when Pauly was a child. Touring together has provided the father and son an opportunity to reconnect.

WHO: A Family Affair starring Pauly and Sammy Shore WHEN: 11 p.m. Friday-Saturday, March 7-8 WHERE: Orleans Showroom, 4500 W. Tropicana Ave. COST: $33, $44, $55 INFO: 365-7111

"We have a great relationship. We got very close and we still are today," Sammy said. "He still calls me two to three times a week."

Of course, the father and son cannot help but take a few pot shots at each other in separate interviews.

When asked about his son, Sammy says: "Let me say two words: I'm sorry. It could have been worse. I could have given birth to Carrot Top."

And when asked about what he's learned from touring with his dad, Pauly replies: "He picks up tips from me. I really don't pick up anything from him."

Sammy also nags Pauly about his penchant for blue humor onstage, while Pauly re-sponds that he's simply being himself.

"I grew up on the (Sunset) Strip with Richard Pryor and Sam Kinison and drugs and parties ... why would I try to be something I'm not," he said. "I don't think I'm X-rated. I think I'm R-rated. When I talk about things that are a little edgy, there's a smile to it. You can tell that I'm not that serious about it. I don't think people leave thinking, 'He was so blue I was offended.

Meanwhile, there's no end in sight to the father-son comedy tour. At least, as far as Sammy is concerned.

"I'll retire when I'm dead," he said. "I'm going to keep doing it until I can't. I'll probably wind up coming up (onstage) in a wheelchair."

Which is fine by Pauly. Touring with his dad is special, he said.

"In years to come I'm sure I'll look back on it and be like, 'Wow, my Dad opened for me,' he said. "Not many people can say that."

HOROSCOPE

The coming week is likely to demand greater care than usual from everyone in all walks of life, as the chance of accident rises and the stars seem to present one obstacle after another with each passing day. That which is least expected may become the norm right now, as much that was once routine is turned on end and most individuals actually become used to that which is highly unusual and unexpected. Indeed, it may $eem that anything goes — up to a point.

Fortunately, this should prove to be only a temporary phase, and one that is likely to pass quickly. Those who are eager to see the old ways once again prevail shouldn't have to wait long. Still, there are many lessons to be learned from this unusual week. The readiness is all at this time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 5) - This is a good week to re-evaluate your current situation. Don't settle; make changes as needed. (March 6-March 20) — It's a good week to make clear your intentions; others will want to know precisely what you intend - and what your timetable is. ARIES (March 21-April 4) You'll get a glimpse of certain opportunities that are likely to arise soon. Make plans. (April 5-April 19) - You'll make a start that is worth remembering — as it is likely to lead to something quite remarkable in the end. Don't let down.

TAURUS (April 20-May 5) — That which is most challenging to others may actually be a walk in the park for you. (May 6-May 20) — You're not likely to fit in as expected, because your own individuality may be asserting itself more now than in the past.

GEMINI (May 21-June 6) — You're trying too hard to do things the way someone else would; try to develop your own unique style. (June 7-June 20) — It's not likely to take you long to accomplish your primary goal. When you start focusing on peripheral issues, things get complicated.

CANCER (June 21-July 7) — Practicality is not your biggest concern. You must focus primarily on overall effectiveness. (July 8-July 22) — Your plans may have to change more than once, but when all is said and done, you will have benefited from your course of action.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 7) — Your working relationship with a Cancer or Aquarius native may become temporarily strained. (Aug. 8-Aug. 22) — It's not for you to fit into any discernible pattern; be true to yourself at all times, whether or not it meets another's expectations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 7) — It's time for you to consider doing something new and rather radical. Now is the time for you to be quite daring. (Sept. 8-Sept. 22) — You can come up with an imaginative solution to a stubborn problem, and others are likely to embrace it.

embrace it. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 7) — You're not going to be able to satisfy everyone, so concentrate on doing what is right. (Oct. 8-Oct. 22) — Don't give up or give in prematurely; you're going to want to stick with it until the bitter end — when rewards become measurable. SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 7)

- Your accomplishments are worth remembering - and rewarding. Keep up the good work. (Nov. 8-Nov. 21) - You may make a few minor errors, but the overall outlook is good, and you should encounter few serious obstacles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 7) — If you find yourself traveling, remember to take special precautions. Heed warnings. (Dec. 8-Dec. 21) — You'll come up with a way to solve most, if not all, of your problems — and those who observe you at work will surely be impressed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 6) — You may be facing incredible odds, but there is no real reason not to go ahead with plans. (Jan. 7-Jan. 19) — It may fall to you to correct someone else's minor errors — and you must do so with vigilance, or things will add up and get serious.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 3) — You're going to have to trust someone else to take care of some of your business affairs. (Feb. 4-Feb. 18) — You may feel as though you're following the winds of fortune, but the fact is that you are simply being uncertain, wishy-washy.

DESERT GARDENER Angela O'Callaghan Valley's soil can be prepared for roots

Most of the plants we select for our landscapes do best when the soil is beginning to become warm.

grow where the drainage is fair up to six or eight inches, but plants that produce a large root system will suffer under those conditions. Unless the adventurous gardener has adjusted for the depth of the root zone, poor drainage can cause survival problems for the plants and headaches for the horticulturist. The first way to check drainage is to look at the soil. Even a turf area will remain soggy for several hours after irrigation if water cannot readily escape from the soil. The next technique is to dig where a new plant is scheduled to go. This is the time to determine whether the spot will or will not drain well. In digging the hole, it will become clear if there is an excess of rocks that will need to be removed. It will also be apparent if the hole has a hard bottom. Once the hole is dug, fill it with water. If it takes less than an hour or two to empty, the soil is probably excessively sandy and needs to be richly amended. More commonly, a lack of drainage will be a problem. The water should drain away within 24 hours, at the absolute most. Should it take longer, the bottom needs to be perforated with an auger or jackhammer. Filling the hole with a gallon or more of vinegar can help dissolve some of the carbonates that can form the rocky bottom to make digging easier. If all else fails, it might be worth finding a new spot. No tree or shrub will thrive unless its roots can permeate moist, but well-drained soil.

Here in Southern Nevada, however, soils are among the most problematic facets of horticulture. This is acutely obvious in soils around residences.

It is not altogether big news that desert soils are different from those found in other places. In our wild lands, there is little fertility, few animals and not much shade. In developed areas, those problems are compounded by construction practices. Because it is necessary for the ground to be stable underneath houses, home building often results in soils being severely, deliberately compacted. This kind of stiffness is good for construction stability, but makes the soils almost impermeable to roots and drainage water. Few plants respond well to sitting in a muddy pond; their roots stop pulling up water and they ultimately rot. Even garden areas that might originally appear promising can present unpleasant surprises.

This can be particularly true when a spot is being changed from turf, whose roots are relatively shallow, to trees or shrubs, whose roots will spread out and deep. Grasses may be perfectly content to

THE ACES ON BRIDGE Bobby Wolff

When finesses don't work, attempts to recover can fail

Blind and unwavering indiscipline at all times constitutes the real strength of all free men." Alfred Jarry finesse was wrong and the spades didn't break," bemoaned South, after going down in his slam.

"That's because you took the wrong finesses!" retorted his partner.

After South had sensibly opted to rebid to show extra values in a balanced hand, he received the soft lead of a trump against six hearts. This lead is rarely right against a small slam, since the loss of a tempo can be fatal. Conversely, against a grand slam a trump lead is generally safe enough - particularly if the opponents have announced possession of the top honors.

After drawing trump in three rounds, South played ace, king and spade queen. When the jack failed to fall, he tried one minor-suit finesse, then the other. Unlucky.

North explained: "After drawing trump, you should take the spade ace and king, then finesse the spade 10 if West follows to the third round. Even if this loses to East's jack-third of spades, East is now endplayed. He must either give you a ruff and discard or return a minor into one of your tenaces for your 12th trick."

"But what if West shows out on the third round of spades? East will still have a spade left with which to get off play," persisted South.

"Should West show out, rise with dummy's spade queen, then play the 10, discarding a minor-suit card and throwing East in with the jack. Once again East is endplayed and must present you with your 12th trick."

ANSWER: Jump to four spades, which is weaker than bidding three spades, as you are virtually in a game force here. Your option is to make a second negative, then raise spades. While traditionally that second negative was a call of two no-trump, these days people tend to use the cheaper minor (here, three clubs), partly to get notrump declared by the right side.

Miniature portrait leads to speculation

Where is Catharine's ivory miniature? Like treasure boxes, family heirlooms and artifacts possess fascinating stories. If we peer intently enough through closed eyes and open imaginations we might see the object held, dusted, perhaps even admired, by our ancestor. The item could be a clock, a Bible, a pair of earrings or a building; each can lead the researcher to further, sometimes non-traditional, records.

In the case of my ancestor Catharine Dodge the family treasure is a photograph of an ivory square on which artist John Wood Dodge painted her portrait. The photo of this miniature painting led me to the John Wood Dodge Papers, microfilm #960 T3453, Archives of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C. This collection is not a traditional genealogy resource, but we often find treasure in manuscript collections, and this one held great promise. I borrowed it on Inter Library Loan (ILL) from my local public library branch, and it contained a wealth of information on my Catharine Dodge and her family.

Although Catharine "Kate" Sophia Dodge grew up between New York City and Poughkeepsie homes, she spent most of her formative years in Manhattan. In February 1831 the 21-yearold Catharine sat for her first cousin and future brotherin-law, artist John Wood Dodge in New York. Portraits of loved ones on small ivory squares or ovals, usually housed in gold cases, were quite the thing for members of society to show to one another. J.W. Dodge was an up-and-coming young artist sought after by New York's elite to paint their miniature likenesses. Young Miss Dodge's toilette with her elaborately coiffed and coiled hair and her empire gown with puffed sleeves, crisscrossed bodice and demure lace inset must have taken hours to complete during her days of sittings. Her descendants hold only a photographic reproduction of Kate's miniature so we cannot see the delicate shades that dusted her face and hair or the contrasting colors of the decorative cummerbund and braid detailing her rich gown. The family story that accompanied the ivory square's replica proudly told how the artist Dodge showed it at the New York World's Fair, where it won first prize. In actuality, artist John Dodge exhibited his miniature of "Miss Catharine S. Dodge, my wife's Sister," at New York's National Academy of Design in 1831. after which he likely gifted the portrait to its subject. Although his portrait of his wife's younger sister did not win him an award, many of his later paintings did.

The artist Dodge kept excellent records of his work, which his descendants loaned for microfilming by the aforementioned Archives of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C.

Thanks to their generosity, researchers can view J.W. Dodge's account books, which meticulously note each portrait he completed, the subject and price he charged; every portrait he exhibited, the date and location of the exhibition, and any prize his work may have won.

The artist's collection contains images of Dodge's portraits of his wife and their common grandmother; along with images of his wife's siblings and her parents.

The likenesses kept by the artist and handed down in his family were microfilmed by the Smithsonian, but at least two miniature paintings were missing from his collection: one that he likely gave Catharine and one he painted in April 1833 of, and probably presented to, his wife's other sister Elizabeth.

Four years after she posed for her portrait, Miss Catharine Dodge married Nathan MacCorkle in New York. where their first three children were born. The young couple moved to her husband's native Bucks County, Pennsylvania, in about 1844, where their other four children were born, and where they spent the greater part of the rest of their lives. Nathan died in 1881 and his widow lived 10 years longer, dying in 1891 in Philadelphia "at the home of her son Augustus." Might that be when Catharine's youngest son James Monroe MacCorkle came into possession of his died in 1925 in South Bend, Ind., he was said to be in possession of his mother's miniature. At his death Kate's portrait was likely inherited by one of James's six surviving children. Is the small portrait of the dark-eyed young woman in formal dress who directly returns her viewer's gaze now enjoyed by one of James MacCorkle's grandchildren? Perhaps the ivory square found its way to an antique shop; if so, did the shop owner research the artist to determine the portrait's history, or try to determine the identity of the mysterious young subject? Maybe the tiny painting worked its way to the back of a drawer in an old chest years ago, its dark painted eyes now staring unseeing into darkness, awaiting discovery. I would love to know ... where is Catharine's ivory miniature? A longer, more detailed more, Shafritz recommends a book that methodically and humorously details the subculture of competitive Scrabble gaming, "Word Freak: Heartbreak, Triumph, Genius, and Obsession in the World of Competitive Scrabble Players," written by Stefan Fatsis, a Wall Street Journal staff reporter.

"(The book) increased our membership. Our tournaments used to be 300-400 people," she said. "Now we're getting close to a thousand. A lot of younger kids read the book and decide to try it out."

Between tournaments, Shafritz stays Scrabble sharp by playing several times a week with friends and in a Scrabble club she founded that meets at 9:30 a.m. Thursdays at the West Flamingo Senior Center, 6255 W. Flamingo in Las Vegas.

Shafritz, of course, prefers having a clock. And she said she is looking forward to her next tournament, where she can conduct some serious Scrabbling.

'To do battle over a Scrabbleboard-howcanlexplain an obsession to you? You ei"Hell."

And when the swing craze died and the group split amid internal dissension, most everyone - including band members, family, friends and fans - assumed that was the end of the Squirrel Nut Zippers.

Everyone but the group's drummer, Chris Phillips.

"I just realized something was totally missing in my life,' Phillips said. "I thought, 'Who says we can't play together?' We never broke up; we just quit calling each other."

So one day in 2006 he decided to call former bandmates and Squirrel Nut Zipper cofounders Katherine Whalen and Jimbo Mathus with his suggestion of performing again.

Phillips was caught off guard by their response.

"I was a little surprised they said 'yeah,' but I was very pleased," he said. "We all ended up on the same page ... just like when the band started."

With most of the original line up intact - Whalen, Mathus, Phillips, Je Widenhouse and Stuart Cole – as well as new players William Dawson, Henry Westmoreland and Gabriel Pelli, Squirrel Nut Zippers began playing again last year.

"Even at the first rehearsals, it felt like nothing had changed," Phillips said. "In fact, it felt stronger because of the time apart."

The band spent much of last year on the road and will do the same this year as well, including a 9 p.m. performance Friday at Rocks Lounge at Red Rock Resort, 11011 W. Charleston Blvd.

There are also plans to release new material - studio and concert.

But don't call this a Squirrel Nut Zipper reunion.

"I'm not sure if 'reunion' is the right word," Phillips said. "I guess it is the right word for people outside of the band. It makes sense. I just think we took a lot of years just to figure out what we wanted to do. "We put everything behind ders) contains every digit, I to 9.

olive branch to former members Tom Maxwell and Ken Mosher, who quit Squirrel Nut Zippers and later threatened to sue the band for withholding royalties after their departure, before settling out of court.

Maxwell and Mosher, though, were not interested in rejoining the group.

'When we were starting up the band again, I thought it would be great to include

EAT PAPER TO LOSE WEIGHT

This probably isn't the craziest claim you've heard. Fad diets expect the absurd but don't deliver. Weight Watchers® isn't a diet. Because losing weight isn't about one-size-fits-all miracle cures. It's about eating right and living healthy. Which actually makes sense. And it's exactly what you'll learn at Weight Watchers®.
