A LETTER FROM THE CIVIL WAR

By Sheryl Busterno

This letter was written by my great, great grandfather, Simon S. Wilcox, a Private, and later a Hospital Steward, with Co. K of the 123rd Illinois Infantry Regiment.

He was born in England on 16 Nov. 1825, emigrated to the U.S. about 1840, married twice and had 9 children. He died at the Old Soldiers Home in Danville, Ill. on 27 Nov. 1912. The 123rd Illinois Infantry Regiment was from Coles and Clark Counties, Ill. Edmond R. Connely was a neighbor of Simon's in Coles Co., Ill.

This is a verbatim copy of the letter except for the items in parenthesis which are mine.

Camp: At Mooresville
State of: Alabama
February 24th, 1864

Mr E R Connely Dear Friend

Your kind and welcome letter of the 16th is at hand and I was glad to hear that you and your Family were in good health, the greatest earthly blessing we can enjoy. The Health of the Redgmt was never better and the Boys are in fine spirits. My own health is good and I weigh heavier than I ever did before. Camp life agrees with me very well.

The weather is warm and fine and the people are ploughing and making gardens. This is a fine Country but thinly settled by Whites. But plenty of Blacks. The plantations are large, comprising many hundred acres. And on each Farm a town of Blacks with only one white man in the overseer and his family. But Slavery is doomed and the slave holders themselves own it - now all or nearly all the able bodied men are in our lines leaving the Crippled and the old helpless men and women behind for their masters to take care of and they are a heavy expense to them and I think it is good enough for them. But enough of this.

I am glad to hear that Amanda (Amanda Wilcox, 1847-1870, Simon's daughter) is doing well and at a good place. I feel thankful to you for your kindness toward her. Charles Biggs arrived this last night and brought the sad news of Riley's death (Sgt William R. Connely of Company K who died of wounds on 12 Feb. 1864). Poor Riley he suffered a long time and the news of his death cast a gloom over our Company. It is a heavy stroke for his friends and more particularly his Father. May God give his grace for the bear this severe bereavement and to adopt the words of one of old: the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, Blessed be the name of the Lord.

Edmond, you seem to think we ought to write first. Perhaps we had as we are soldiers and don't have much to do, and then we have such comfortable houses and good desks and so many of the comforts of life. And then we get so many pleasure rides after the Rebs to say nothing of picket duty or dress parade and a thousand and one other things we have to do, and then you have so mutch (sic) on your mind. And as uncle Sam don't furnish you any paterns (sic) of clothing and then you have your children to nurse and take care of to say nothing of smoky chimneys and scolding wives. I sometimes get thinking of the hardships that our poor friends at home have to undergo. But then I think it is good enough. They out to have been more lucky and been soldiers as we are.

But enough of this nonsense. Write as often as you can as your letters are always welcome. Joel (Cpl. Joel Weaver of Co. K) joins me in sending his love to your sweet family.

Yours as ever,
S.S. Wilcox

Write soon.

FAMILY CEMETERIES FALLING PREY TO CHANGING TIMES, PRIORITIES

BY: Amy Westfeldt, A.P.

Ivydale, West Virginia.

The Boggs family has buried its dead on the same hilltop in Clay Country for more than 100 years. Relatives used to hoist a casket on their shoulders and carry it up a steep, winding dirt road to the family cemetery. Then they rolled up their sleeves and knelt to dig the grave.

Family owned cemeteries once were the only available burial ground in rural areas, officials in the funeral industry say, and thousands still exist nationwide. But many of the graveyards have been abandoned or are overgrown because the families either don't have the money to maintain the grounds or aren't interested anymore.

"Death used to be very much a family thing," says John McDowell, a cemetery-law expert in the state Attorney General's Office. "But people are more afraid of death now. We're asking someone else to do these things for us instead of doing them ourselves." Cemetery-industry officials also say that younger Americans in particular are less interested in tending relatives' graves, preferring to leave the chore to professionals. "They want convenience," says David Brownworth, president of the Central States Cemetery Association. "They don't want the hassle of mowing the grass." Brownworth, who owns a cemetery in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, says members of the younger generation also don't visit graveyards as much. "It's unfortunate we're losing some of the values that we had," Brownworth says.

Big Otter, an unincorporated town about 50 miles east of Charleston, is full of family cemeteries. A century ago, it was full of Boggses, too. James Martin Boggs came here with his wife and 13 children in the 1860s and bought a two-acre grassy clearing on a hilltop overlooking his house. It became the family cemetery. Jean Boggs, a 68-year-old retired schoolteacher who lives a half-mile from the graveyard, recalls a time when funerals were important in her family. "Funerals used to be a social event," Boggs said. "My mother thought it was terrible if you didn't show respect and go to the funeral of everyone in the community. It was a feeling of family. We used to say, "The Boggses surely enjoy their funerals" because we liked to get together."

The Boggs cemetery is easy to miss from the main road. It sits surrounded by trees and a wire fence to keep out the cattle. Dozens of gray tombstones bearing the same name are partially hidden by high grass. There are no walkways or benches. Jean Boggs has been left with the task of tending her relatives' graves since her father died eight years ago. Buried in the cemetery are her parents, grandparents, 11 great-aunts and uncles, and numerous cousins and in-laws. About 20 Boggses remain in Big Otter, the youngest of them in their 60s. Most of Jean Boggs' younger relatives have moved away and probably won't return to be buried here.

"People don't visit like they used to," she said. "People also don't pay as much attention to their property. Little has been spent to mow the grass or keep flowers on graves," she said. Boggs sold plates with photographs of her church to family members and held bake sales to raise a few thousand dollars for the cemetery. That money is in trust. As she walks between the tombstones, Boggs sets upright a broken white box with pink flowers that has fallen on her aunt's grave. Boggs plans to be buried here. "We all wonder who will take over," she said. "But it's been there for 100 years and there's always somebody."

Hugh Keatley, a former president of the American Cemetery Association who owns graveyards in Bluefield and Princeton, said, "the residents who cared most about tending graves are no longer able. The sad situation is many of the people who were responsible for maintaining the cemeteries and keeping them looking nice are now buried in them. Years ago, it became kind of a custom that family members would go to the cemetery on Memorial Day and clean it up. But these days, cleaning the cemetery is not the average family's idea of recreation."

FAMINE IMMIGRANT

A famine immigrant in your background? If you know the name of the ship your ancestor took from Liverpool, you may be able to obtain information from Mayseyside Maritime Museum, Pier Head, Liverpool, England L310W. It is believed that about 70 percent of the Irish famine immigrants changed ship at Liverpool. The museum has passenger lists that may show the city of their origin.

ELLIS ISLAND

Deep gashes and graffiti have spoiled the once shining Wall of Honor on Ellis Island that was unveiled six months ago in memory of the thousands of immigrants who passed through the gateway to the U.S. The 951 foot copper wall, engraved with the names of 200,000 immigrants, will probably be repaired and cleaned this summer, the National Park Service, which maintains and administers the island, said Saturday. It had not yet been determined if the engraved panels, which are on top of a waist-high wall that runs along the edge of the island, would be closed to the public or would be removed for repairs, spokesman Manny Strumpf said. Careless tourists and sea gulls are as much responsible for the damage to the wall as vandals, he said. He added the foundation has been testing a new and stronger sealer on three panels of the wall. If it proves effective in protecting the copper surface, all several hundred panels will be coated with it.

GENEALOGY AT THE JAMBOREE

By: Helen L. Smith

The Southern California Genealogical Society's Jamboree is a place to learn about genealogy, buy books and supplies, and visit with people to learn what you can. But would you think you could continue your research there? Hardly not. But that is exactly what happened.

In browsing through the various exhibits I stumbled across a table labeled "Cornwall." AH, I'm researching in Cornwall so I should check out this table. Two lovely people, Mr. and Mrs. Ross, were seated at the table which had several books and some folders on it. As I chatted with the Rosses and surveyed the material on the table, I noticed the top folder with the name CADDY on it. I became somewhat excited since this was my first encounter with the Caddy name having two "d"s. They asked if this was one of the names I have been searching and I replied affirmatively. They invited me to look through their information which was the extraction of information from the 1871 census from Cornwall.

I opened the folder to look on the first page where lo and behold was the Tom CADDY I had been looking for. Not only did I find him, age 15, but also his brothers and sisters, his mother and his father and all of their ages. It also included their occupations, where they were living and where each had been born.

This information enabled me to find the reference to the birth record of Tom CADDY when I recently traveled to England and visited the General Register Office, also known as St. Catherine's House, in London.

THANKS AGAIN TO THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY AND TO MR. AND MRS. ROSS. IT'S GREAT TO FIND A TREASURE WHEN YOU AREN'T EXPECTING ONE!

Did she indeed immigrate from France after 1827 or is she descended from the Peter SERROT who was a founder of Gallipolis ("French City"), OH, in 1794, or the James SERROT, a descendant of Peter, who was in "The French Grant," in Scioto County, OH, in in early 1800's?

Deaths Reported in the Las Vegas Age

Las Vegas, Nevada

April 7, 1905 to June 30, 1909

This begins a series of indexes from a pioneer Las Vegas newspaper. If you are accustomed to reviewing vital records in areas of the country where records have been kept for three centuries or more, you may find it strange that all Las Vegas records are twentieth century records.

Las Vegas (Spanish for "The Meadows") was named for its flowing springs and surrounding meadows. Native Americans lived near this green area in the desert for many centuries before the first Europeans appeared.

The first efforts by people of European origin to establish a permanent settlement in Las Vegas were from 1855 to 1858 when one party of Mormons was sent to establish a mission and soon afterwards another Mormon group was sent to develop the areas mineral resources. Neither effort was successful and both groups returned to Utah Territory.

From 1858 until the beginning of the twentieth century, the area was a ranch owned first by O. D. Gass and later by Archibald Stewart.

Construction of the San Pedro, Los Angeles, and Salt Lake Railroad between Los Angeles and Salt Lake City resulted in the beginning of Las Vegas. In 1902 Senator W. A. Clark of Montana, developer of the railroad, purchased the Stewart Ranch and in 1904 made it a railroad Division Point. The first train arrived in January 1905, and on May 15, 1905, the railroad auctioned to the public about 1,200 lots. Las Vegas was born.

Although the growth of Las Vegas in the second half of this century has been truly spectacular, the early growth of the town amazed no one. Gaming was made illegal a few years after the auction and, despite its becoming the county seat of newly-organized Clark County in 1909, the population in 1930 was barely more than 5,000. Construction of Boulder (Hoover) Dam beginning in 1929 and re-legalization of gambling in 1931 signalled the beginning of development.

The first issue of a new newspaper, the Las Vegas Age, was published on April 7, 1905, which preceded the date the Stewart Ranch became Las Vegas by a month. The newspaper was published from that time until 1947. In the early years it was a weekly but the frequency of publication increased gradually and the Age had become a daily at the time publication ceased.. Genealogists are fortunate to have available a single source for these vital records during the pioneer period in Las Vegas.

The Nevada State Historical Society indexed the entire Las Vegas Age newspaper and prepared a separate index of deaths reported from the inaugural edition in 1905 through the end of 1933. These were the years when Las Vegas was little more than a village.

With this issue of The Prospector, we begin publication of these records from the very earliest days of Las Vegas.
